Bibliography

As portions of this bibliography suggest, electronic resources played an important role in our research. This was especially true for the chapters dedicated to the post-Second World War era. While the web addresses cited here were active and accurate as of June 2012, there is no guarantee that they will be so in the future. To address this issue, we have tried to cite stable URLs, where possible. But even this effort takes us only so far: as any Internet user knows, websites often disappear or migrate, webpages are revised or change location, blogs get abandoned or shut down, and some links just go dead. Occasionally, for mysterious reasons, material previously posted disappears from active websites altogether. And all of this is completely beyond our control.

Some of the major cases cited in the endnotes of our text are listed below. But in the cases of Abousfian Abdelrazik, Abdullah and Omar Khadr, and the security-certificate cases of Hassan Almrei, Paul William Hampel, Mohamad Harkat, and Mohammed Mahjoub, references cited in the endnotes (to court documents and decisions at various levels of the judiciary, including in some cases references to U.S. court proceedings) are too numerous and diverse in format to list here.
